On their way to the church in Aldershot they drove from Royal Lodge, Mentmore, to Great Park, with police on ahead and back of them. Each car had a steady fifty-five—only mph. Faster cars passed them. The cars were guarded by a police escort at every entrance to the road. At every junction and on every turn the police were there.

In Aldershot a guard was seen travelling as fast as 60 mph in an attempt to break the King's record. In another car a police officer was waiting for the cars to finish their tour to the station. After the tour the police were seen cleaning up the dust from the windows of the cars. At one stage they were so thick that the police had to clean them with their hands.

The bullet-proof window of the car was not affected by the bullets fired. At one point the Queen's car was stopped and searched by the police. The search was carried out in a very formal manner.
